When this phenomenon combines with technological acceleration and the increasing pace of life, time seems to flow ever faster, making our relationships to each other and the world fluid and problematic. It is as if we are standing on "slipping slopes," a steep social terrain that is itself in motion and in turn demands faster lives and technology. As Rosa deftly shows, this self-reinforcing feedback loop fundamentally determines the character of modern life.

Social Acceleration: A New Theory of Modernity on JSTOR

In Social Acceleration: A New Theory of Modernity, Rosa finds that spark in the curious paradox of contemporary society of how we don't have any time although we've gained far more than we've needed before (xxxv).

Book Review: Social Acceleration: A New Theory of Modernity

'Social Acceleration' argues that acceleration is the key distinguishing factor of modernity, but that in late modernity acceleration has sped on beyond certain bounds. This means nothing less than that the project of modernity (individual and political autonomy) has been superseded by the process of modernity (acceleration). Whereas going faster used to be a means of pushing forward modernisation, it now impedes it.

Technical acceleration feeds into the acceleration of social change which in turn accelerates the pace of our lives which creates a demand for ever-increasing technical acceleration. But the increasing speed of technical innovation, societal change, and the pace of life hasn't thrust us forward into history but rather destroyed it.
