I asked that question over and over when I was writing my latest book, Stand Tall. It's a novel about a family turned upside down by divorce, turned right side up by humor, and challenged to renewal by the lessons of war. We have seen profound tragedy these last months. Our memory banks are full. These are frightening and unsettled times that require a great deal of us all. We don't know the effect that September 11 will have on our consciousness now or in three years or in twenty.

Taking things apart helps, too. He learned that from Grandpa. And in the process of seeing how lamps get rewired and laser pens work, in Grandpa's powerful memories of the Vietnam War, in helping an old soldier learn to walk again, in Sophie's insistence that Tree be himself, he begins to heal from the divorce and learns to stand tall. But when a flood threatens his home, Tree's new-found confidence is put to the test.
